

In Search of the “Hill Country”: Using the Foursquare API to Delineate a Vernacular Region in Texas

William Flynn, Ph.D.
March 17, 2020

Located just a few miles west of Austin, the town of Dripping Springs, Texas (population 3,876) is nicknamed the “Gateway to the Hill Country”

I. Introduction

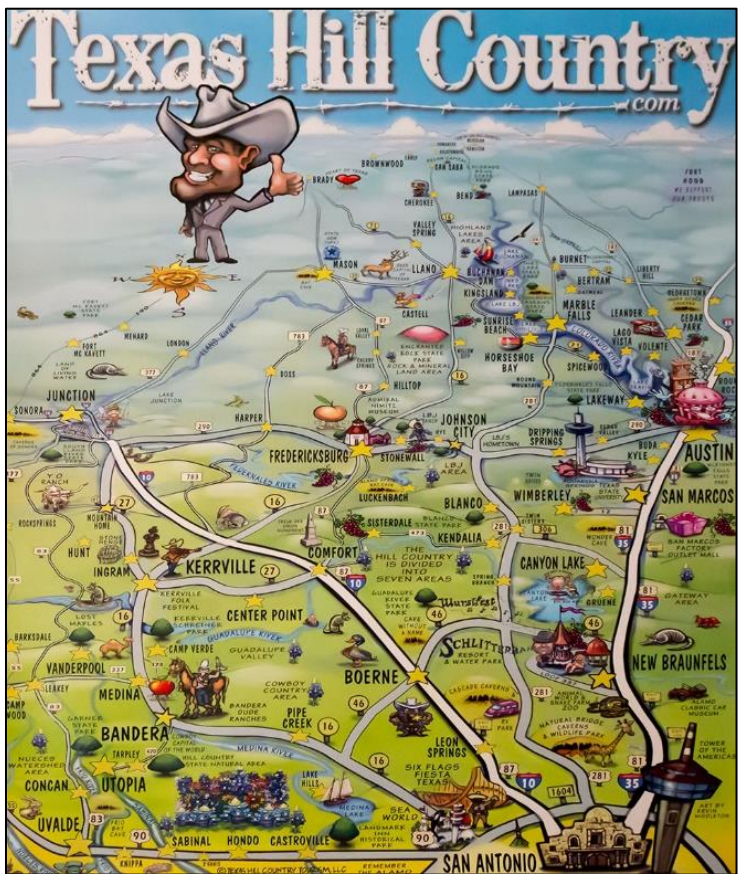

Given that Texas is one of the largest states in the country, it is often subdivided into many regions, some of which include the Panhandle, Big Bend, Coastal Plains, and Rio Grande Valley. A well-known and widely visited region of Texas that has often been inconsistently defined is the Hill Country. It basically comprises the portions of Central and South Texas that are situated on the Edwards Plateau, to the west of the Balcones Escarpment that runs along the cities of Austin and San Antonio. This area is a favorite spot for scenic drives, leisure, and outdoor recreation, and it has even become a frequent landing destination for retirees and snowbirds.

A typical spring wildflower scene in the Texas Hill Country.

In the study of geography, there are three types of regions—formal, functional, and vernacular. Formal regions are areas where people share one or more measurable traits, such as a common language, system of beliefs, nationality, or even physical characteristics. Examples of formal regions include the country of Peru, the Sahara Desert, and a Francophone region of Canada. Functional regions are set up around a system of interactions, such as a public transit network or the delivery area of a pizza restaurant. Vernacular or perceptual regions are defined by people’s attitudes, feelings, and perspectives about an area. These regions reflect a “sense of place”.

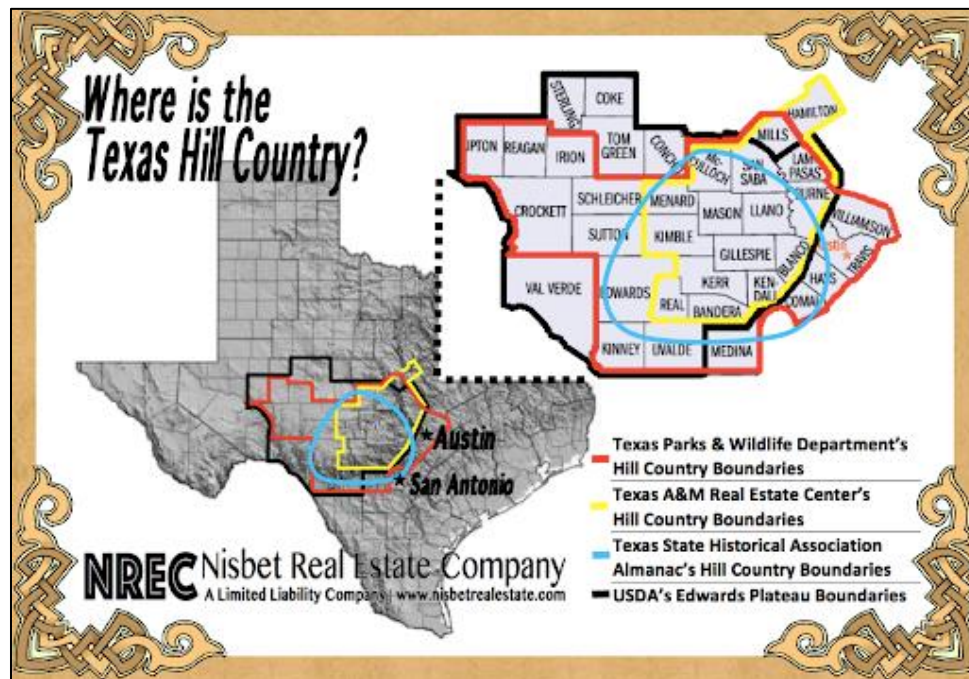

Given the “Hill Country” name, the region seems to reflect physical geography, and one might think that it would be fairly easy to determine where the Hill Country begins and ends, but this is rarely the case with vernacular regions. Here is one representation of the places of interest within the region from tourist website TexasHillCountry.com:

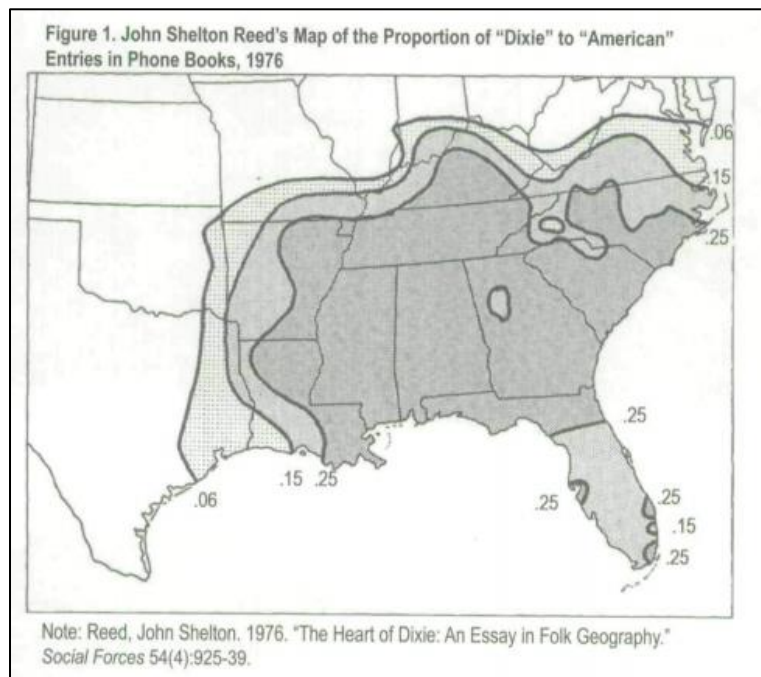

The NBC affiliate in San Antonio, television station WOAI, gives its viewing area separate weather forecasts for a so-called Hill Country Zone that extends from New Braunfels back to Rocksprings and covers six counties:

John Nisbet, a realtor based out of New Braunfels in Comal County, posted this interesting graphic on his company's website. It poses the question, "Where is the Texas Hill Country?" and shows four different representations as provided by Texas Parks and Wildlife, Texas A&M Real Estate Center, Texas State Historical Association, and the United States Department of Agriculture. This provides a consensus ballpark as to what is located within or outside the Hill Country region, but it is clear that there is a difference of opinion.

Human geographers have long been interested in attempting to map vernacular regions. Several decades ago, the phone book white pages were a frequently used vehicle for quantifying the application of regional names into place / business names. In the example below, John Shelton Reed was interested in delineating the vernacular region of "Dixie" in the U.S. South, and he did so by perusing city phone books to compare the ratio of business names beginning with "Dixie" versus those starting with "American." Through some manual interpolation, Reed was able to identify the core and periphery of the "Dixie" vernacular region.

There are many examples of businesses and institutions in Texas that promote the Hill Country in their names, such as Hill Country Eye Associates of New Braunfels, Hill Country Automotive of Boerne, and Hill Country High School in Kerrville. Businesses tend to incorporate the regional name in order to communicate their service area and to exploit the usually positive place attachment and pride shared by the locals and potential clientele.

This project will attempt to better understand the perceptual geography of the Texas Hill Country, and, in doing so, serve as a case study to modernize the old-school methodology of geographers retrieving and analyzing data on business names that incorporate regional references.

II. Data

In order to delineate the extent of the “Hill Country” region of Texas, this study will leverage Foursquare’s Places API. This repository offers a comprehensive inventory of venues that can be queried to harvest an inventory of sites, ranging from businesses to churches and from schools to medical offices that play the geography card and promote their ties to the local area by featuring “Hill Country” in their name. The observed frequency of “Hill Country” place names will be used to interpret and illustrate the bounds of the vernacular or perceptual version of the Texas Hill Country region.

III. Methodology

While Foursquare can boast an impressive total catalog of more than 100 million venues worldwide that can be readily consumed by apps, one limitation with the service is that each call against the API will only return a maximum of 50 venues up to a search radius of 100 kilometers (roughly 62 miles). Each account is also subjected to a daily quota of API calls. This requires that the researcher be efficient with their strategy in using the Foursquare API.

Thus, a hierarchical approach will be the most cost-effective way to leverage the API and assemble the inventory of “Hill Country” venues. Since the Texas Hill Country is relevant to a single state, by taking the bounding box of the Lone Star state (minimum vs. maximum latitudes / longitudes), a grid of sample points evenly spaced by one degree of latitude/longitude will provide the starting point for the search of “Hill Country” venues. Using the Nominatim reverse geocoding package within the GeoPy library, it is possible to filter these one-degree spaced points to those located in Texas (remove irrelevant points located in Mexico, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana, and the Gulf of Mexico).

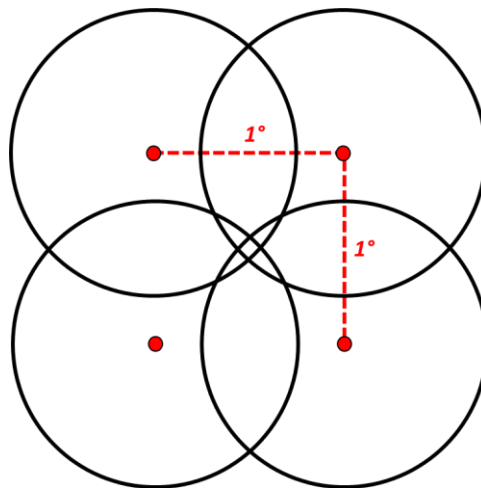

Bounding Box of Texas

Minimum Latitude:	25.837377° N	≈ 25.8°
Maximum Latitude:	36.500704° N	≈ 36.6°
Minimum Longitude:	106.645646° W	≈ -106.7°
Maximum Longitude:	93.508292° W	≈ -93.5°

Unfortunately, Foursquare offers a search radius that is circular. Circles are problematic because they do not tessellate like triangles or hexagons. This means that, depending on the constant value set for the radius of a search circle, the resulting set of circles will produce underlaps (radius is too small) or overlaps. In order to ensure completeness and include all venues that have “Hill Country” in their name, it is preferable to have the overlap. It is easy to filter out retrieved duplicates via the venue ‘ID’. It would be a shame to miss out on some ‘Hill Country’ venues because the search circles did not have a large enough extent to cover relevant areas.

How far out should the initial search radius be set? Throughout the extent of Texas, one degree of latitude ranges from 68.833 to 68.951 miles. The longitude can vary from 55.311 to 62.212 miles, depending on the part of the state. A conservative approach would be to take the maximum distance of these values (68.951 miles) and consider this to be the maximum spacing of starting search points. In the theoretical example below, which assumes uniformity in horizontal and vertical grid spacing, the dashed red lines between sample points would be 68.951 miles apart. Drawing search circles large enough to avoid underlap but small enough to minimize overlap, the query coverage might resemble this mockup. The radius of each circle would be the side of a 45-45-90 right triangle, where the hypotenuse would be 68.951 miles. Using the Pythagorean Theorem, the idea radius would be 48.756 miles, or 78,447 meters (the unit of measurement for Foursquare’s API). By rounding up and employing a search radius of 80,000 meters, one can be confident that no part of Texas will be excluded.

Following the first round of searches, any sample point returning exactly 50 venues (the API limit) would require a deeper dive because there may be more relevant venues in the vicinity that may have been missed. A second round of searches would be devised, with the search points set at one-half of the previous spacing. Thus, a coordinate pair that found 50 venues in the first round will be turned into a set of nine new coordinate pairs with one-half degree of latitude/longitude spacing centered around the original coordinates. The neighborhood search radius will also be reduced from 80,000 meters to 40,000 meters. By turning one large search circle into up to 9 smaller search circles, it increases the likelihood that fewer than 50 venues will be returned per search point.

Hierarchy	Degree Spacing Between Samples	Search Radius in Meters
Level 1	1.0000	80,000
Level 2	0.5000	40,000
Level 3	0.2500	20,000
Level 4	0.1250	10,000
Level 5	0.0625	5,000

This process would continue with increasing granularity until all search points return fewer than 50 venues, or when a full iteration conducted at a higher level of granularity returned no new venues. This yields confidence that the Foursquare API searches have produced an exhaustive list of “Hill Country” venues, and accomplishing this through a low cost in API calls.

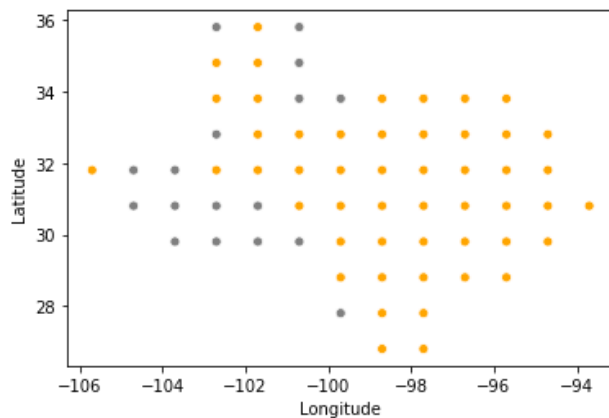

After reaching this stage, the inventory of statewide “Hill Country” venues will be cleansed, analyzed, and plotted. Since the Foursquare API returns actual latitude and longitude coordinates for each venue, the “Hill Country” venues can be mapped to show the spatial pattern of their distribution. Various techniques will be employed, such as point mapping, cluster mapping, hexagonal binning, county-level aggregation, and normalizing the venue data by area and per capita to present choropleth maps.

IV. Results

The search for “Hill Country” venues was launched with a Level 1 sampling hierarchy comprised of a grid of search points spaced apart by one degree of latitude and longitude. A total of 67 searches were conducted with a search radius of 80 kilometers. A total of 302 “Hill Country” venues were discovered and added to inventory. In the scatterplots below, the points in gray returned fewer than the maximum of 50 results and were deemed to have exhaustively searched their geographic coverage. The orange points (50 of the 67 sampling points in the Level 1 hierarchy) returned 50 venue candidates and were carried over for more granular searches in the subsequent round.

For the Level 2 searches, each of the 50 sampling points that reached capacity in Level 1 were converted into a new set of nine sampling points spaced apart by $\frac{1}{2}$ degree of latitude and longitude, centered upon the original Level 1 point. This new round of searches employed a smaller search radius of only 40 kilometers. After removing any duplicate coordinate pairs, a total of 218 searches were conducted in Level 2, for which a total of 494 “Hill Country” venues were logged, and 207 of these were previously undiscovered by the Level 1 searches. This brought the cumulative total of unique “Hill Country” venues to 509. Out of the 218 Level 2 search points, 81 returned the venue capacity of 50 items, so these sampling points were carried forward for follow-up in Level 3.

In Level 3, each of the 81 sampling points that returned the maximum number of results in Level 2 received increased granularity and were transformed into a new set of nine sampling points spaced apart by 0.25 degrees of latitude and longitude, centered upon the original Level 2 point. The search radius was reduced again, this time to 20 kilometers. After removing any duplicate coordinate pairs, in Level 3, a total of 433 searches were conducted, yielding a total of 601 “Hill Country” venues, of which 105 were previously undiscovered by the searches in Levels 1-2. After the third round of hierarchical searches, the cumulative total of unique “Hill Country” venues increased to 614. Out of the 433 Level 3 search points, 89 still returned the maximum number of 50 venue results, so these sampling points were isolated and brought forward for additional follow-up in Level 4.

In the fourth hierarchical level of searching, each of the 89 sampling points that returned the maximum result capacity in Level 3 received increased granularity and were converted into a new set of nine sampling points spaced apart by 0.125 degrees of latitude and longitude, centered around the corresponding previous Level 3 point. The search radius was further reduced to 10 kilometers. After removing duplicate coordinate pairs, Level 4 queries were conducted with a total of 525 searches that produced a total of 589 “Hill Country” venues, of which 13 were previously undiscovered by the searches in the first three rounds. After the fourth iteration of searches, the cumulative total of unique “Hill Country” venues increased to 627. 94 of the 589 sampling points in Level 4 were still returning the Foursquare maximum number of 50 venue results, so these sampling points were retained for follow-up in Level 5.

Level 5 searches were performed with a sample point spacing of 0.0625 degrees latitude/longitude and a narrower 5-kilometer search radius. A total of 545 searches were conducted against the Foursquare API, which returned 458 “Hill Country” venues, but all of these had been identified in at least one of the previous rounds of searching. Even though 77 of the Level 5 search points were still returning the maximum number of venue candidate results, it did not seem worthwhile to increase granularity and perform additional searches in the vicinity with a smaller radius in a theoretical Level 6 because no gains were realized in Level 5. At the end of five hierarchical rounds of searching, a total of 1,788 Foursquare API queries across the Lone Star state resulted in a rather exhaustive inventory of 627 venues bearing the “Hill Country” region in their names.

Hierarchy	New “Hill Country” Venues Retrieved	Cumulative Venues
Level 1	302	302
Level 2	207	509
Level 3	105	614
Level 4	13	627

One of the attributes available in the Foursquare API is the venue category. There were sixteen categories of venues that appeared at least ten times across the region. By far, doctor’s offices comprised the most common venue category, at more than 5%, and this does not even include the roughly 2% of venues that were dentist’s offices. Patients in Lakeway can be treated at Hill Country Allergy and Asthma, San Marcos offers Hill Country Sports Medicine, and Boerne has Hill Country Hearing. For dentistry, options include Hill Country Smiles in Kerrville and Hill Country Pediatric Dentistry in Marble Falls.

The Hill Country is worshipped in the names of several places of faith, including the Cowboy Church of the Hill Country in Austin, Unitarian Universalist Church of the Hill Country in Kerrville, Hill Country Nazarene Church in Cedar Park, and many Hill Country Bible Church campuses across the Greater Austin metropolitan area.

Residents in the Texas Hill Country might choose to hire contractors providing a variety of home services, which comprised the third most common venue category. Options here included Hill Country Septic Service in Kerrville, Hill Country Housekeepers of Wimberley, Hill Country H2O in Leander, and Hill Country Handymen of Boerne.

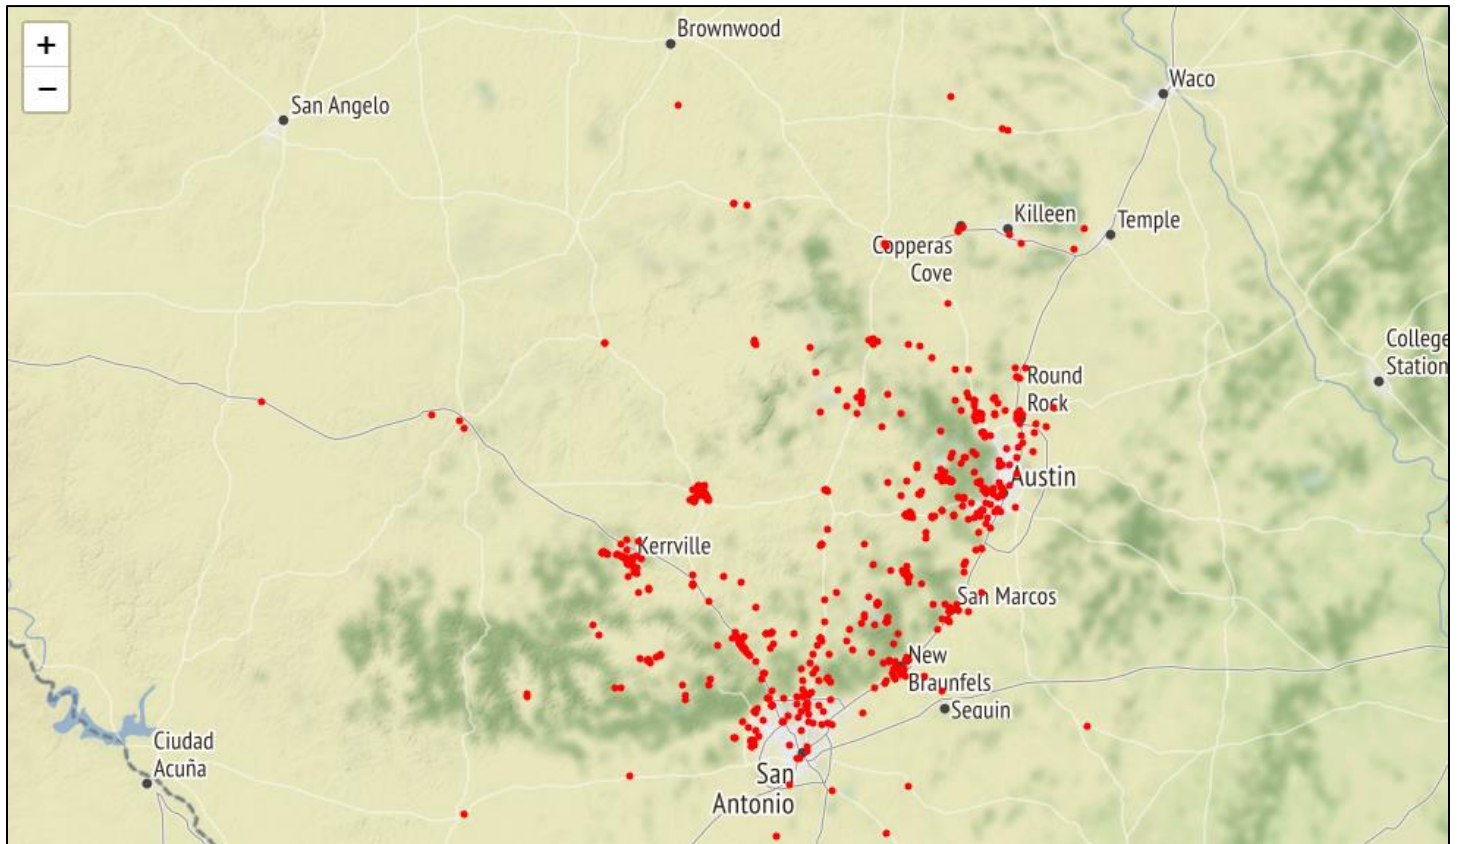

The rest of the top venue categories reflect other services (i.e., automotive, construction, etc.), resorts/hotels, buildings/offices, and restaurants.

The Foursquare API returned city tags for 597 of the 627 (94%) "Hill Country" venues, and it is no surprise that the two largest urban areas on the eastern edge of the region—San Antonio (N=85) and Austin (N=71) had the lion's share of the venues. Fredericksburg and Kerrville, two small towns in the center of the Hill Country, tied for third place with 41 "Hill Country" venues.

Since Foursquare's API also returns the latitude and longitude coordinates for each venue, it is possible to plot the actual location of each "Hill Country" place. The following is a snapshot from an interactive Folium map that plots each venue with a single red point. The Austin-San Antonio corridor is well-represented. Very few venues are found to the east of Interstate 35, while to the west of the highway, the "Hill Country" is exhibited frequently in location names in Austin, San Marcos, and New Braunfels, as well as the next towns over like Bee Cave, Dripping Springs, Wimberley, and Boerne. San Antonio's venues mainly appear in the northern third of the city outside of Loop 410. Significant point clusters can be seen in Kerrville and Fredericksburg. Most of the "Hill Country" names appear in the central and eastern portions of the physical region, with very few instances to be seen west of Interstate 10. Perhaps most surprising were the "Hill Country" venues located as far north as Temple, Killeen, and Copperas Cove.

Another way to present the venues is in the form of a cluster map, where nearby point locations are aggregated into groupings. These clusters present the number of locations in the vicinity and are color-coded to indicate intensity of frequency. Below is an example where at the given map scale, more than 100 Hill Country venues are rolled up for north San Antonio, southwest Austin, and Kerrville-Fredericksburg (red circles). The yellow and green circles depict smaller numbers of venues extending from the core to the periphery of the region, eventually getting out to where a few individual marker points are plotted.

Zooming into just a small portion of Dripping Springs reveals seven Hill Country venues within a few blocks.

One more method by which to plot the spatial pattern of the Hill Country would be to employ hexagonal binning, or hexbins. Hexagons are a compact shape that, unlike circles, can tessellate across a surface. This technique offers a two-dimensional histogram to illustrate the frequency of venue occurrence across evenly shaped hexagons. The matplotlib library offers hexbin functionality and the MPL toolkits include some basemaps to provide geographic context, including this terrain hillshade and various political boundaries. To remove the noise of outlier venues (i.e., Hill Country EMS in the Rio Grande Valley, Jerry Nelson's Hill Country in Beaumont, Hill Country Window Film in Sachse, etc.), a minimum count of 5 was enforced for each hexbin. In the resulting map below, a contiguous span of hexbins serves to illustrate the vernacular Hill Country region through venue names. The darkest hexagon representing 61 venues is located in southwest Travis County, to the west of Austin, centered around Dripping Springs. The I-35 corridor is featured prominently between Austin and San Antonio, as is I-10 leaving San Antonio toward Kerrville (and Fredericksburg to its north).

One more way to quantify and visualize the prevalence of “Hill Country” venues is to spatially assign them to their counties and normalize the results against population and area. The Texas Department of Transportation hosts a GeoJSON layer of county boundaries, and a table on Wikipedia’s List of Counties in Texas page could easily be scraped using BeautifulSoup to retrieve 2017 population estimates and county areas in square miles.

When normalizing the “Hill Country” venues on an areal basis, Comal County (New Braunfels) produced a leading 110.3 venues per thousand square miles. Each of the top four counties—Comal, Travis (Austin), Hays (San Marcos), and Bexar (San Antonio) are located along Interstate 35 and at least 90 “Hill Country” venues per thousand square miles.

Alternatively, the “Hill Country” venues can be normalized in terms of population. When expressing the number of venues per million people, Gillespie County (Fredericksburg) is the leading county at 1,613.8 venues per million people. McMullen County ranked second, but only had a single venue, Hill Country BBQ in Tilden, and is located more than an hour’s drive south of San Antonio and is really an outlier. Kerr County (Kerrville), with 947.4 venues per million, also ranked high when normalized per capita. Whereas the top counties for venues normalized by area were located in the urban areas along Interstate 35, the inland rural counties ranked higher in the consideration of venues normalized by population. Gillespie, Kerr, Kendall, and Burnet were the only counties to rank in the top ten of both normalized lists.

V. Discussion

The Foursquare Places API offered the opportunity to be an innovative vehicle for exploring and delineating the perceptual geography of the Hill Country region of Texas. Three significant limitations of the API were 1) the low cap on returned results at 50 venues, 2) results based on relevance, so a search for “Hill_Country” often brought back venues with only “Hill” or “Country” somewhere in the name (required additional code post-search to scrub the results and filter to venues having the exact phrase “Hill Country”), and 3) searches based on non-tessellating circles. This study overcame these issues by using a heuristic technique to compile “Hill Country” venues by employing multiple rounds of hierarchical granularity. Five iterations of searching involved 1,788 calls to the API across the state of Texas and retrieved a total of 627 relevant venues.

Following the data retrieval, the venues list was cleansed, summarized by cities and categories, and normalized by area and population. The venue locations were plotted and mapped, portraying the spatial pattern of “Hill Country” places in different forms, including raw points, point clusters, hexagonal bins, and at the county level. The core of the vernacular “Hill Country” region appeared to lie along the west side of the stretch of Interstate 35 between Austin and San Antonio, with a secondary cluster in the more inland towns of Fredericksburg and Kerrville. While the physical geography shows hilly relief extending much farther west, the “Hill Country” is not manifested in venue names west of Kerrville. Returning to the Nisbet Real Estate Company’s graphic questioning “Where is the Texas Hill Country?”, in terms of venue names, it seems that the Texas State Historical Association Almanac’s Hill Country boundary (blue line) best resembles the pattern found in this case study, however it still underrepresents the magnitude at which the cities and towns along Interstate 35 between Austin and San Antonio play up their “Hill Country” association. As with the motto of Dripping Springs, these places see themselves as gatekeepers to the Hill Country.

VI. Conclusion

This case study of the Hill Country region of Texas demonstrated the utility of the Foursquare Places API to investigating regional geography. Whereas geographic scholars in the past commonly approached vernacular region delineation through gathering venue data from phone books, this API incorporation offers several advantages. Foursquare has a current and comprehensive inventory of places. A few lines of code can perform searches, wrangle and massage the API output, generate a readily usable dataset, and enable seamless visualization. These API searches can identify words or phrases as a partial string anywhere in the venue name, compile results from all areas, and return additional content, such as venue categories, location coordinates, and even pictures and user reviews. It would be very easy to modify this case study to use Foursquare to investigate a vernacular region elsewhere, such as Big Sky, Dixie, the Midwest, or even the incorporation of college mascots and/or state nicknames (i.e., Longhorn, Sooner, Buckeye, etc.) or independence movements (i.e., Cascadia, Jefferson, etc.).
